MOVING SCENES

The other day I went to visit a friend of mine who has a fourteen year old boy. Jim is in high school and hopes to be a lawyer some day. He uses his bedroom as a sort of library-study den. On the wall was a picture showing a street scene in a small town. There was a large clock suspended from a store. I was about to leave the room when something bothered me. I blinked my eyes several times. Did I need new glasses? Jim laughed at my puzzled expression.

"The clock hands are really moving. Nothing is the matter with your eyes."

What Jim had done was to cut out a large colored picture from the Sunday Section of the newspaper. It represented this street scene. Then he cut out the face of the clock. He fitted into it the face of a small electric clock. Everything was framed. But because the clock was behind the picture, he had a small shelf attached to the wall. Thus the picture was actually suspended from the shelf and the clock itself rested on the shelf.

This idea of having a "moving scene" in a picture has a lot of possibilities. You need some imagination and a couple of items. Then a few hours of work. Actually you can have any picture in a frame and add the "moving scene." Thus you have a picture of a lighthouse on a cliff overlooking the sea. You can draw it, paint it or purchase something similar. You cut out the top of the lighthouse and insert a small electric bulb. If you want the light to go on and off, you use a "blinker" attachment. Instead of a frame for your picture you can paste it against the back of a box. This is what is known as "shadow box." You could cut out a picture of a small railroad station. Then take a little electric locomotive and place it in front of the picture. Raise the locomotive so that the wheels turn but it doesn't go anyplace. You have to connect the locomotive to your control apparatus supplied with the set.

No reason why you can't do something similar with a small fish tank. You would need a picture of a beach showing the ocean or a lake scene. You might be able to get a large picture just showing the ocean. Then cut out a section so the front of the fish tank shows. Everything is then mounted. People see a picture of water-but something real is moving! They peep closer and notice real little fish enjoying themselves.

With an old pump from your fish tank you can rig up something very novel in a "moving scene." For this you need a picture of a waterfall. Only you will end up by having real water going over the fall. The same water is re-used constantly. Or you can get a picture of an old water wheel, then build a wheel and have it turn.

A small electric motor can give the real touch to a scene in Holland. You have a picture of a windmill. But instead, you have a real windmill being turned by means of the motor in the back.

Start that imagination working. Here are some that should challenge you: You might have people walking along a street during a rainy day. But "real rain" is falling down on their umbrellas. Or you have a plain street scene with a good little toy cat being chased by a bad little toy dog. Or a country road and a little toy car is actually moving along the road. Enough to keep you busy with this kind of a hobby.

A-Fishing You will Go.

More and more people are enjoying the sport of fishing. It knows no age limitations. Nor do the fish care whether you are six, sixteen or twenty six. You can divide fishing roughly into two kinds: Fresh Water and Salt. Today we stick to Fresh Water Fishing.

You will find that a state license is required for Fresh Water Fishing. However there may be in the law an exception for people below a given age limit. Organize your friends into a fishing club. You can combine fishing and a picnic into one outing.

Make a list of available fishing spots. That includes private as well as public places. Then you need a booklet issued by your state conservation department. It tells you the limit you may take on certain protected fish; and even the size that is legal. Thus in my state, you have to throw back bass less than 12 inches and there is a limit to the catch per person.

You can purchase a fishing outfit at a reasonable price. That should include a spinning reel, pole for same, lures, hooks and, of course, your fishing line. A plastic rain coat that can be folded into a small package is an absolute must. A fishing tackle box can hold a small vacuum bottle, your lunch and other items you can purchase when you have some extra cash.

Fresh water fishing may be done from the banks of a stream or river. However there are many areas in which rowboats can be rented. Never overload your boat. Check and find out what kind of bait is best for the fish in the particular area you are going to visit. It may be bloodworms, nightcrawlers or just plain lures.

A fish stringer is handy to have with you. Keep your fish on it while in the boat. You can even watch your "caught fish" swim in the water. If you go in a group, you can arrange to have a prize for the biggest fish as well as for the smallest fish caught.

There are even some places where you can fish, picnic and swim! We have one favorite spot and we spend the entire day taking turns at each of these three activities. And the outdoor fresh air does something to your appetite. If you want to cook your fish you better read up on the preparation of fish. It will require cleaning, scaling, and gutting. But nothing better than cooking and eating the fish you catch.

Of course be certain to take a camera with you. Thus you can prove to your friends that you did get the big fish-and a lot of them. Stop fishing before you become over-tired which is a good safety rule.

INSIDE IRAN

Iran, widely called Persia except by the people who live there, is about a fourth the size of the United States. The country is a broad, dry plateau almost entirely surrounded by mountains. The highest peak-Mt. Demavend-reaches upward more than 18,000 feet. In the interior, sand dunes tower from extensive salt deserts. The narrow coastal plain of the Caspian Sea is the only part of the country cultivated intensively. Here, too, are Iran's forests.

The serious shortage of water, except in the mountains and along the coastal plains, is the greatest headache of the Iranians. The many methods used to store and transport nature's stingy supply demonstrate the resourcefulness of the people. There are wells, water troughs, water tanks, water wheels, and water hoists. A network of GHANATS a system of underground water channels invented by the ancient Persians, radiates from every town and village. Shafts at intervals along their course provide access to the tunnels and ventilate them.

Although rich in oil, Iran is basically a poor country. More than three-quarters of the population of some 16 million are either members of nomadic tribes, or peasants who live in villages, or on the land much as they have for the last thousand years. The oil fields, offering steady jobs, are luring many from their tribal life.

Until recently Iran was a feudal state ruled by an all-powerful Shah. Now there is a parliament. The upper house, or Senate, is composed of 60 members, half of them elected and half appointed by the Shah. The more important lower house or MAJLIS has 136 members who are elected by males over 21 years of age. The premier is chosen by the MAJLIS. His program must be approved by both houses.

A great many Iranians subsist on cheese made from the milk of sheep or goats, and also on bread or rice, depending upon the region. Chicken and eggs are fairly common but meat is a rare delicacy. The staple of most meals is rice mixed with a variety of herbs, eggs, meat or onions. This is called HORESHK. The best meat is prepared as KEBABS, grilled in chunks with fat and onions over a broazier. Oranges, nectarines, grapes, apricots, peaches and very large melons can be had in season.

Want to talk Persian? Hello is sa-LAWM. Good night is SHAB ben-khayr. How are you? is HAW-leh sho-MAW cheh-TOW-rast? Thank you is mam-NOO-nam. Please is khaw-HESH mee-konam. And milk is sheer. Rice cooked is po-LOW and bread is NAWN or NOON.
